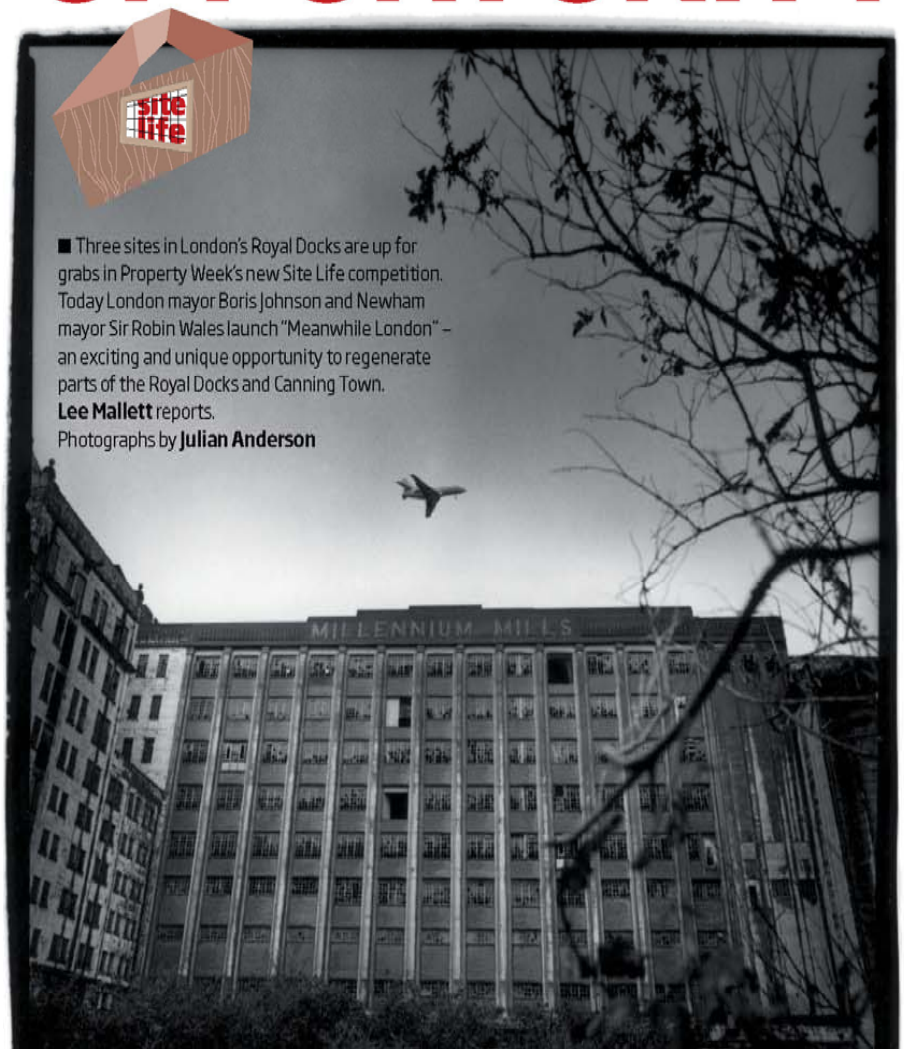
OPPORTUNITY DOCKS



■ Three sites in London's Royal Docks are up for grabs in Property Week's new Site Life competition. Today London mayor Boris Johnson and Newham mayor Sir Robin Wales launch "Meanwhile London" – an exciting and unique opportunity to regenerate parts of the Royal Docks and Canning Town.

Lee Mallett reports.

CANNING TOWN CARAVANSERAI 1

VISION

Canning Town Caravanserai is a welcoming oasis hosted by locals, open to all visitors. For two years it will explore and prototype new local employment opportunities, cultivating vital cultural and economic legacies for Newham.

It is a living manifesto for a new generation of public spaces, integrating forums and facilities, workshops and workspaces, all collaboratively produced by hosts and guests, with artists and architects, thinkers and makers, businesses and communities.

It centres on a vibrant, adaptable, open courtyard, surrounded on all sides by busy shops and bustling production spaces where innovative and sustainable business ventures are invented or re-imagined.

CONTEXT AND METHOD

Canning Town has an increasingly migrant population, which will be added to in 2012 by an influx of Olympic tourists. Newham has one of the most culturally diverse demographics in the country and a large youth population. It is also one of the UK's most deprived boroughs. The site lies between the busiest transport exchange in Newham and a grid of housing estates which lack quality space.

Our project takes inspiration from the caravanserai - roadside inns where travellers could rest and recover from their journeys, supporting the flow of commerce, information, and people across a network of global trade routes. The caravanserai provides a protected public space where diverse social and commercial encounters can take place in safety.

The caravanserai is a destination in its own right – an exemplar of Newham's policy to attract people to live, work and stay. The project welcomes everybody and accepts a variety of contributions, offering space for activities to meet a range of budgets, growing with time and demand.

COMMUNITY

The entire project is a partnership between the creative team and the local community, developing skills and employment opportunities.

Prior to construction, we will collaborate with neighbourhood action groups and invite the community to help discuss and define the very essence of the project.

Workshops at Hallsville Primary School will encourage students to develop caravanserai storylines; dinners at Community Links will brainstorm ideas whilst cooking and celebrating the diverse food of all the local cultures.

The construction itself will both employ and train local residents, developing skills and leadership, cultivating a sense of local ownership.

The residency will incubate small local businesses as well as host a range of activities from games to races, guided walks to treasure hunts, which will spread out into the neighbourhood.

It will also establish locally-led engagement groups, chairing weekly meetings between the crew and community and building an independent steering group for the future management of the site.
